

"As editor, teacher and especially poet, Lionel Abrahams always engaged his audience directly, seeming to go instinctively to the heart of their concerns and confront them. And here he is again, bringing forth meaning from what was always a painful but surefooted struggle. I know that I owe my survival as a writer and as a human being to his calm insights, his counsel, his constant reminder of irreducible things to live for: to create, to tell the truth, to seek the meaning, however painful and difficult."

— David Farrell

"He must have known how he inspired writers, but did he know, I wonder, how he inspired all romantics, ever believer in the serious and unbiddable nature of love..."

— Annabel Frost

Lionel Abrahams is... "the most influential person in South African literary history."

— Michael Gardiner

In him we find "both the exuberant Isiaid hope of a [Herman Charles] Bosman and the measured Jeremiad scepticism of a [JM] Coetzee."

— Mark Gevisser

"I have been impressed by one thing in Lionel Abrahams: the consistent thread, in his thinking, of the importance of the humanising values of literature, and that these values can only be achieved through a rigorous attention to the exacting demands of making art. To many on the left, such a position elicited a great deal of impatience. Lionel's positions may be irritating, but impossible to ignore, and you grudgingly accede to them! ... He is a symbol of lasting value, and I appreciate the courage with which he took those positions when it was difficult to take them."

— Njabulo Ndebele

"A tough liberal and literary hero, he was always an amazing friend."

— Patrick Cullinan

"Lionel had a vast capacity to connect with people, to draw from them the gifts they wished to share with the world."

— Guy Lieberman
